The days of spending an entire career with one company are a thing of the past. According to data published in The Balance: Careers, the average professional switches jobs 10 to 15 times in his or her lifetime, while the Bureau of Labor Statistics indicates that the average employee tenure in 2016 was 4.2 years. Understanding which fields have a high rate of growth can cause men and women make smart choices when switching jobs. The following are the top-rated careers, based on data from the BLS, U.S. News & World Report, and Glassdoor.

• Mathematician: Mathematicians earn an average salary of $106,000 per year. Mathematicians use statistical theories to help companies in various industries make informed decisions.
• Marketing manager: Marketing managers guide how a particular company or industry presents itself. They also analyze how campaigns and efforts have succeeded or failed to impress market share. A marketing manager earns an average of $85,000.
• Actuary: These individuals employ mathematics and economics to help corporations predict and manage risk in their organizations. The field is expected to increase by 22.5 percent by 2026. Actuaries earn a median salary of $101,000.
• DevOps Engineer: Thanks to the ubiquity of digital technology, professionals who can work with software developers and system operators to oversee code and IT infrastructure are in high demand. These workers command, on average, $105,000, and as computer-based industries only continue to expand, so do the career opportunities.
• Optometrists: Seeing clearly and maintaining proper visual health is important. Optometrists can earn $106,000 a year.
• Nurse anesthetist: Several different careers in the medical field are booming, and nurse anesthetist is one of them. These medical professionals administer anesthesia to patients undergoing surgery and monitor vital signs to maintain patient safety. An average salary of $160,000 can entice registered nurses to go through the extra schooling to become anesthetists.
• UX designer: A UX designer is a graphic designer, interior designer or architect who helps improve the usability, accessibility and enjoyability of tangible and digital products based on user experiences. Salaries vary depending upon the specific niche, but can average $90,000 annually.

Instructor of Environmental Studies

King's College, Wilkes-Barre, Pennsylvania, is seeking an Instructor of Environmental Studies, non-tenure track, beginning in August 2019.

King's College has a well-established Environmental Program offering bachelor's degrees in environmental studies and science within the setting of a small college committed to providing excellent professional programs and a strong liberal arts experience. The Environmental Program seeks an instructor with a passion for teaching at the undergraduate level who can complement the current curriculum and teach four courses per semester.

Requirements include a master's degree in a field that can contribute to the environmental studies curriculum and proven experience teaching at the college level. The instructor will demonstrate a willingness to help broaden the scope of the program, perhaps in a topic area such as sustainability. The successful applicant will also help with student recruitment, retention, advising, program outreach, undergraduate research, and other activities related to program development. Preference will be given to applicants with significant experience teaching college-level courses, especially those related to environmental studies (including online and field-based), as well as experience helping students develop academic skills needed for their success.

Successful candidates will support the Holy Cross Mission and Catholic identity of the College, and be committed to teaching at an institution where the liberal arts are emphasized.

Send one *.pdf file containing a letter of application, CV, a teaching statement that includes possible complementary courses contributing to the curriculum and outlines your approach to helping students develop beneficial academic practices, undergraduate and graduate transcripts, and three letters of recommendation (sent by their authors) to hrjobs@kings.edu. Complete applications must be received by March 1, 2019. Only complete applications will be reviewed.

Director of the RN to BS in Nursing Program

The Nursing Department at King's College, located in Wilkes-Barre, PA, is currently accepting applications for a full-time, tenure-track faculty position starting August 2019, with the possibility of a contract for Summer 2019, beginning in May available.

Specific duties of the position include:
* Assuming the role of Director of the RN to BS in Nursing program
* Teaching responsibilities within the Department of Nursing as assigned
* Collaboration with the Nursing Department Chair in the preparation of the self-study materials for a CCNE accreditation visit, scheduled fall 2019

Qualifications include:
* Current Pennsylvania nursing license or eligible for PA license
* Doctoral degree in Nursing or health related field
* Minimum of five years experience teaching
* Teaching experience with traditional and non-traditional formats, preferred
* Excellent communication skills, both oral and written

For confidential consideration, please submit a letter of application, curriculum vita, and names of three references by email to hrjobs@kings.edu. You may send via mail addressed to the Office of Human Resources, King's College, 133 North River Street, Wilkes-Barre, PA 18711. Applications are being accepted until February 28, 2019.

King's College is a private, Catholic college of the liberal arts & sciences and pre-professional programs sponsored by the Congregation of the Holy Cross. The College serves over 2400 FT & PT undergraduate & graduate students. A rigorous core curriculum provides a foundation for all majors. The College is located near downtown Wilkes-Barre, on the edge of the Pocono Mountains. King's is committed to recruiting a diverse faculty and student body, and welcomes applications from persons of traditionally under-represented groups. EOE www.kings.edu
While traversing the nation’s highways, drivers may not realize they are in the company of people who help keep the country’s economy flowing smoothly. The various trucks seen on the roadways are crucial economic components, as are the drivers who toil hours on end behind the wheel. As vital as they are, truck drivers are now in short supply, with some citing an aging workforce, high turnover rates, increased freight demand, and “lifestyle priorities” that can make other industries seem more attractive to would-be drivers.

The economic advisor Morgan Stanley reports that about 75 percent of freight in the United States is moved over the nation’s roadways by the roughly three million truckers. The American Trucking Associations says that about an additional 50,000 drivers are needed to meet deficits, particularly in the long-haul sector of the industry. If the trucking shortage goes unaddressed, industries could falter and deliveries may be late. In addition, rising costs of transporting goods by freight companies may be passed down to consumers. Industry experts fear the shortage may almost triple by the year 2026.

Analysts say this problem has been festering for about 15 years. However, the recession that began in 2008 masked the issue, and when the North American economy strengthened once again, the cracks in the system became more apparent. The trucking lifestyle isn’t attracting millennials and the incoming Generation Z individuals who are interested in a work-life balance, continues the ATA. If consumers are wondering why prices on certain goods have steadily risen, they may have trucker shortages to blame. Transportation costs have been problematic for companies such as PepsiCo, Halliburton, Hasbro, and Tyson Foods, just to name a few. Tyson has said freight costs spiked by an estimated $200 million in 2018.

Experienced truckers who are interested in finding work or individuals new to this employment sector may find that odds of getting gainful employment are in their favor. The demand for drivers has resulted in freight companies offering higher salaries as well as signing bonuses for qualified drivers.

Truck driver shortages are affecting businesses. However, for those interested in becoming truckers, there has never been a better time to sign on.
